

VEEHANA

The collection relates the connection between emotions, memories, and the perception of reality. It starts from the idea that what we understand as "everyday reality" is a projection of our own consciousness, shaped by what our eyes have seen and our hands have touched. Inspired by childhood memories, especially the silent presence of porcelain dolls, this fragility becomes a metaphor for strength and desire, evoking a powerful feminine image rooted in my personal references.

The collection proposes an ambiguous and constantly changing space, where the boundaries between past and present, innocence and experience, emotion and reason are blurred. Like internal structures that struggle with each other and challenge their own development, each piece reveals this intimate confrontation. Through the manipulation of textiles and knitted elements, nervous impulses and emotional stimuli are translated into a visual and tactile expression, constructing a narrative that celebrates vulnerability as strength.
